

With Love from BrSTU

We all know that the month of February has always been celebrated as the month of love for some centuries now. During the period different gifts, flowers and the rest are exchanged by loved ones.

Students around the world celebrate this day even more than the working class, so right here in our university we decided to come together and start the celebration of love which we tagged "everybody happy on Valentine's Day".

The hall was all red laced with a little touch of white, the audience (students) gorgeously dressed, looking their best.

The event was slated to kick off by 2pm but before 2pm the hall was nearly full to the brim, even while decoration was still in progress, the students trooped in. Without any glimpse of doubt, I knew that February 14 (Valentine's Day) is arguably most students' best day of year.

The event was hosted by Elina Nicholayevna Turabova (Russian language teacher) and Artykov Azamat (Turkmenistan graduate student) with an introductory speech on the topic of love. After that many different love poems were recited.

Ksenia, a first-year Belarusian student, was the first to recite a self-written love poem. The lyrics of her poem were so romantic, though it was rendered in the Russian language.

Captain Solomon, a student from Nigeria, also read a Russian love poem. Then a love video was played and we viewed through the projector.

Victor Orubasa, another Nigerian student, recited a love poem also in the Russian language.

Aziz, a student of Turkmenistan recited his poem after Victor did. Then we enjoyed a few cool music video enhanced by the projector.

Our Chinese students were also very active that day, Miakiang, Fuchao and the rest of them all read Russian love poems to our delight.

Some Turkmenistan students took part in the poem recitation as well.

After the poems section, Articles on Love and Marriage traditions of the countries of our foreign students were read to us with video clips that clearly illustrated the different cultures.

Every time we gather for events like this in our university, it's not only about the fun of the event, we also get an opportunity to learn different cultures due to the presence of students from different countries. We are really an international institute.

Everyone was given opportunity to define and explain LOVE in their own words.

We also had live performances of love songs by some of the students.

Love was already in the air by the time the event got to the end.

LET'S KEEP ON LOVING UNTIL ANOTHER VALENTINE'S DAY. From our beloved Brest State Technical University we say HAPPY VALENTINE'S TO YOU AS YOU READ.
